For Sale - Paclitaxel for injection Albumin-bound

What makes this form of Paclitaxel special?

1. Better Clinical Efficacy: compared to paclitaxel, albumin-bound paclitaxel uses nanotechnology to bind to the SPARC protein receptor through the EPR effect, thereby increasing the drug concentration in tumour lesions and improving clinical efficacy.
2. Lower toxic side effects and possibility of allergy, no steroid hormone pretreatment required when used in combination with pd-1 immune drugs.
3. Depending on protocols in use administration is usually faster than normal paclitaxel in a solvent solution.

The use of albumin as a carrier for paclitaxel has several advantages; it allows for a higher dose of the drug to be given without the need for a solvent, which can cause allergic reactions and other side effects. The albumin-bound formulation is also thought to be more effective at penetrating and killing cancer cells, possibly due to the way that albumin interacts with the cells.

At this time we are seeking Europe-wide distributors for this novel drug combination. We are planning an EU wide DCP and wish to appoint partners in principle. Upon interest commercials will be worked up.

It is expected that this more advanced form of Paclitaxel will require medical practitioner's support before it becomes widely tendered.

Boutique Powder Filling Facility for Sale

It is not often that an MHRA certified powder filling facility in the UK comes up for sale. The facility was built to fill powders into poly-lined cartons for pharmacy and hospital sales. As part of a strategic review of their business objectives the owners determined the facility and it's products no longer a core activity.

The two products currently manufactured in the facility both have UK Marketing Authorisations.
